

NOV. 1 1967

STATINTL

Demonstration peaceful at Stanford

Protesters crowd into doorway to listen to Marc Sapir, right, today.

Stanford CIA protest peaceable

The "massive sit-in" planned this morning by the Stanford Students for a Democratic Society and the Resistance to protest the Central Intelligence Agency's recruitment on campus turned into a quiet peaceable affair.

About 100 students were gathered in front of Encina Hall where the CIA was interviewing students. The protestors occupied their time by singing, while the CIA interviews went along on schedule.

Shortly before noon, Robert Bruch of the Graduate School of Business, who couldn't enter the front door of the Stanford placement office and walked away, was admitted by another entrance for his interview with J. Fred Winters of the CIA.

Earlier, two SDS members, Jack Gerson and David Lichinsky, expressed their opposition to the CIA in interviews with Winters.

Three other students, also believed opposed to CIA were unable to enter the front door of the placement office, which was locked and guarded by student police.

About two dozen students and newsmen went up a fire escape to the third floor of the building, where the demonstrators stomped their feet on the floor above the office where the interviews were being held.

All left promptly when requested to do so by Stanford Dean of Students Joel P. Smith.

At 10:30 Dean Smith warned students outside the front door that they would violate university rules if they blocked normal entry and exit.

The students said they had been locked out by the administration.

At 11:30 Barry Greenberg, a leader of the protest, noted that there were only a handful of student police in front and told the crowd, "When the door is open, we just have to push to get in."

This was when Bruch initially sought entry to the building.

Shortly before noon, there had been no arrests and no sit-ins, although the front entry to the building was locked.

About two dozen students have signed up for CIA interviews today and Thursday.